Feeding San Diego
Good Manufacturing Practices

Feeding San Diego (FSD) operates as a food storage and processing facility under FDA cGMP's (current Good Manufacturing Practices). The following food safety requirements are put in place to ensure that all processing, repacking or otherwise handling of exposed food products are as safe as possible for human consumption.

GMPs provide Feeding San Diego and its volunteers/vendors with guidelines to help ensure our facility continues to produce and distribute high-quality product. Our distribution partners, agencies, and consumers rely on us to deliver a safe and quality product every time.

The GMP zones are identified by:

- Clean white lines painted on the floor outlining the entire GMP zone.
- The sorting room, reclamation room, and volunteer area located in the South portion of the building and are included in the GMP zone as well.
